How the Dead are Disposed of at Palermo. There is one curiosity of Palermo about which I hesitate to disturb you, says a correspondent, writing from this Sicilian city. If you were to see it and let your mind dwell on it you would not sleep for a week afterward. Of all the fantastic, ghastly and sportive dealings with poor mortality that I have seen in my short pilgrimage, the convent of the Cappuccini furnishes the most astonishing. In seeing it I had a new reveals the solution of the converted to the distressing Disorders of Women; for Malaria and for physical derangements generally, this great remedy has no equal. Beware of imposters, imitations and concoctions said to be just as good. For Diabetes, ask for WARNER'S SAFE DIABETES CURE. astonishing. In seeing it I had a new revelation of the capacities of human nature for indulgence in the horrible and grotesque. From the convent we descended into the subterranean corridors where are exposed not buried, the dried remains of the wealthy inhabitants of Palermo. These corridors, of which there are several, are arched, well lighted, and I should think each a couple of hundred feet long. The air in them is dry, and apparently salubrious and one might walk through these isles of death in comfort if he were blind. On each side of these passages are boxes, piled one upon the othernot coffins, but boxes, something with brass nails, and looking not unlike old fashioned hair trunks. You might imagine yourself in an emigrant baggage room on a steamer, but for some other things in the corridors. Each of these boxes contains a dead person.

The occupants of part of them, which have glass fronts, are visbile.

that?

There they lie grinning in arrested decay with just enough skin and flesh on the bones to preserve the semblance of humanity. The poor dessicated bodies have been forced into clothes, sometimes into finery, and many in this awful dress parade of death wear white kid gloves and fine shoes. But this is not the worst. Above these rows of boxes hang, in all the limpness of irresponsibility for appearance which characterizes the dead, ranks of mummies, hang by the neck, or attached in some way to the walls of the vault. They are pretty uniformly clad in sombre robes of cotton, and but for the horrible faces staring at you, might pass for scarecrows. The drying process has drawn the faces into all ghastly contortions, in which one might fancy that the real character of the depated is revealed. Some scowl, some grin with malevolence (that is the worst of all,) and some actually assume a comical look that forces your unwilling laughter. Sometimes groups of three or four incline their dreadful heads to each other as if enjoying some post-mortem humor-ous story. His conceit must be infinite who can walk through these ranks of dried and distorted dead and not feel humiliated by such exhibition of his kind. Is it possible that we shall all look like that? Must all beauty and manliness and bravery come to

There are many children, some not a span long, lying in their little boxes, decked in all the finery of fond affection, the lace and ribbons adding I know not what of mockery to the weasened baby faces. One entire corridor is reserved for the women, and this is more pathetic than the others. Those who died virgins have crownson their heads, and palms of lilies in their hands. They were great beauties, I doubt not, before they came here, for the dark eyed women of Palermo are comely, but maid, or bride, or wife, they are not beautiful now, although they repose in silk dresses, kid gloves and satin slippers. These be dresses for a ball, and what a ball and dance of death is this! Is it any pleasure for my lady to have her lover come and see her in this guise? I learned that at death the bodies are interred in a scaled pit in this cemetery for a year. There is supposed to be something peculiar in the soil which dries the body without destroying it. At the end of a year it is taken out, dressed and either put into its box or up on the corridor. Every year, at least on All Soul's day friends of the departed come to look upon the frightful remains. What satisfaction they can have in the spectacle I do not know, nordo I understand how any man or woman of presentable appearance who has visited these corridors in life, can consent to occupy them after death. Interment here was prohibited about a year ago. I do not know how long the wealthy people of Palermo have Machinist, Iron and Brass Founder been exposed here, but we were told, as we walked along, that 8,000 bodies were in
